Segment M in the southeast (Wayne Co. border). Several segments have already been constructed.

The trail travels by the University of Michigan Medical Campus, Fuller Park, Gallup Park, Washtenaw Community College, St. Joseph Mercy Hospital, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti neighborhoods and downtown, and eventually Ford Lake. Because of its proximity to several job and school-related locations, the trail is not only used for recreational purposes but also as an alternative transportation method to fuel-burning vehicles.

2. Washtenaw County Parks and Recreation Commission's Recreation Inventory

Appendix A contains the table of the "Recommended Classification System for Local and Regional Recreation, Open Space, and Trails". Appendix B shows the "Suggested Facility Development Standards". These standards are to be viewed as guides only, addressing the minimum objectives to be achieved, and not maximum objectives. These standards should be interpreted according to each community's specific social and economic needs and the particular circumstances to which they are relevant.
The Washtenaw County Recreation Inventory can be found in Table 3. This information was gathered by developing a questionnaire form and distributing it to Park superintendents and Park maintenance superintendents to complete during the summer of 2009.

The exact classification for each of these parks is difficult to pinpoint, because each park is large or unique enough to encourage people from all over the county and Detroit metropolitan area to visit and enjoy the facilities, as well as local citizens. Many of the nature preserves are smaller in scale and so would be considered for local use only, but they can contain exceptional features not easily found in this part of Michigan that draw visitors from far and wide, such as the Fox Science Preserve's glacial gravel pit.
