

Chapter 2: Community Background

2.1 Washtenaw County Background

Washtenaw County is located in southeastern Michigan, approximately 50 miles from the city of Detroit. The County is considered part of the Ann Arbor-Detroit-Pontiac metropolitan region and is bordered by Wayne County to the east, Livingston and Oakland Counties to the north, Jackson County to the west and Monroe and Lenawee Counties to the south. Map 1 (page 27) shows political boundaries within Washtenaw County.

The County covers roughly 720 square miles and is composed of a wide variety of landscapes, ecosystems and development. The population center of the County includes the City of Ann Arbor and the City of Ypsilanti. There are several other smaller population centers, namely Chelsea, Manchester, Saline and Milan in addition to the townships that are adjacent to Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti.

Washtenaw County is growing, and has experienced significant amounts of population growth and urban expansion during the past 20 years. Urban development has been most prevalent in the townships immediately adjacent to Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti. In the last 10 years however, the villages of Chelsea, Dexter and Manchester have experienced large population increases as well as increases in new development. These traditionally rural villages and townships are under development pressure, which is not projected to abate for the foreseeable future. The largely undeveloped nature of the more rural areas of Washtenaw County offer vast greenfield development opportunities. Absent any significant farmland or open space conservation program, these areas will gradually be built out.

2.2 Parks and Recreation System

Recreational opportunities in Washtenaw County consist of different types of recreational spaces and facilities, provided by a host of different public and private agencies. Planning for recreation requires an understanding of the existing availability of such services and the respective roles and interrelationships among system providers.

2.3 Types of Recreation Areas

The National Recreation and Park Association (NRPA) has established a recommended standard of 6.25-10 acres of developed parkland per 1,000 residents of any community. These parklands are classified into five categories:

- Mini-park
- Neighborhood Park/Playground
- Community Park
- Regional Parks
- Unique/Individual Features

Mini-Park

A mini park serves a radius of $\frac{1}{4}$ mile and is usually less than an acre in size. These “pocket parks” typically serve high density residential areas. Sometimes called “tot lots” these parks often provide recreation for a specific demographic group, usually seniors or children. The NRPA standard recommends between $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ an acre of mini-parks per 1,000 residents.

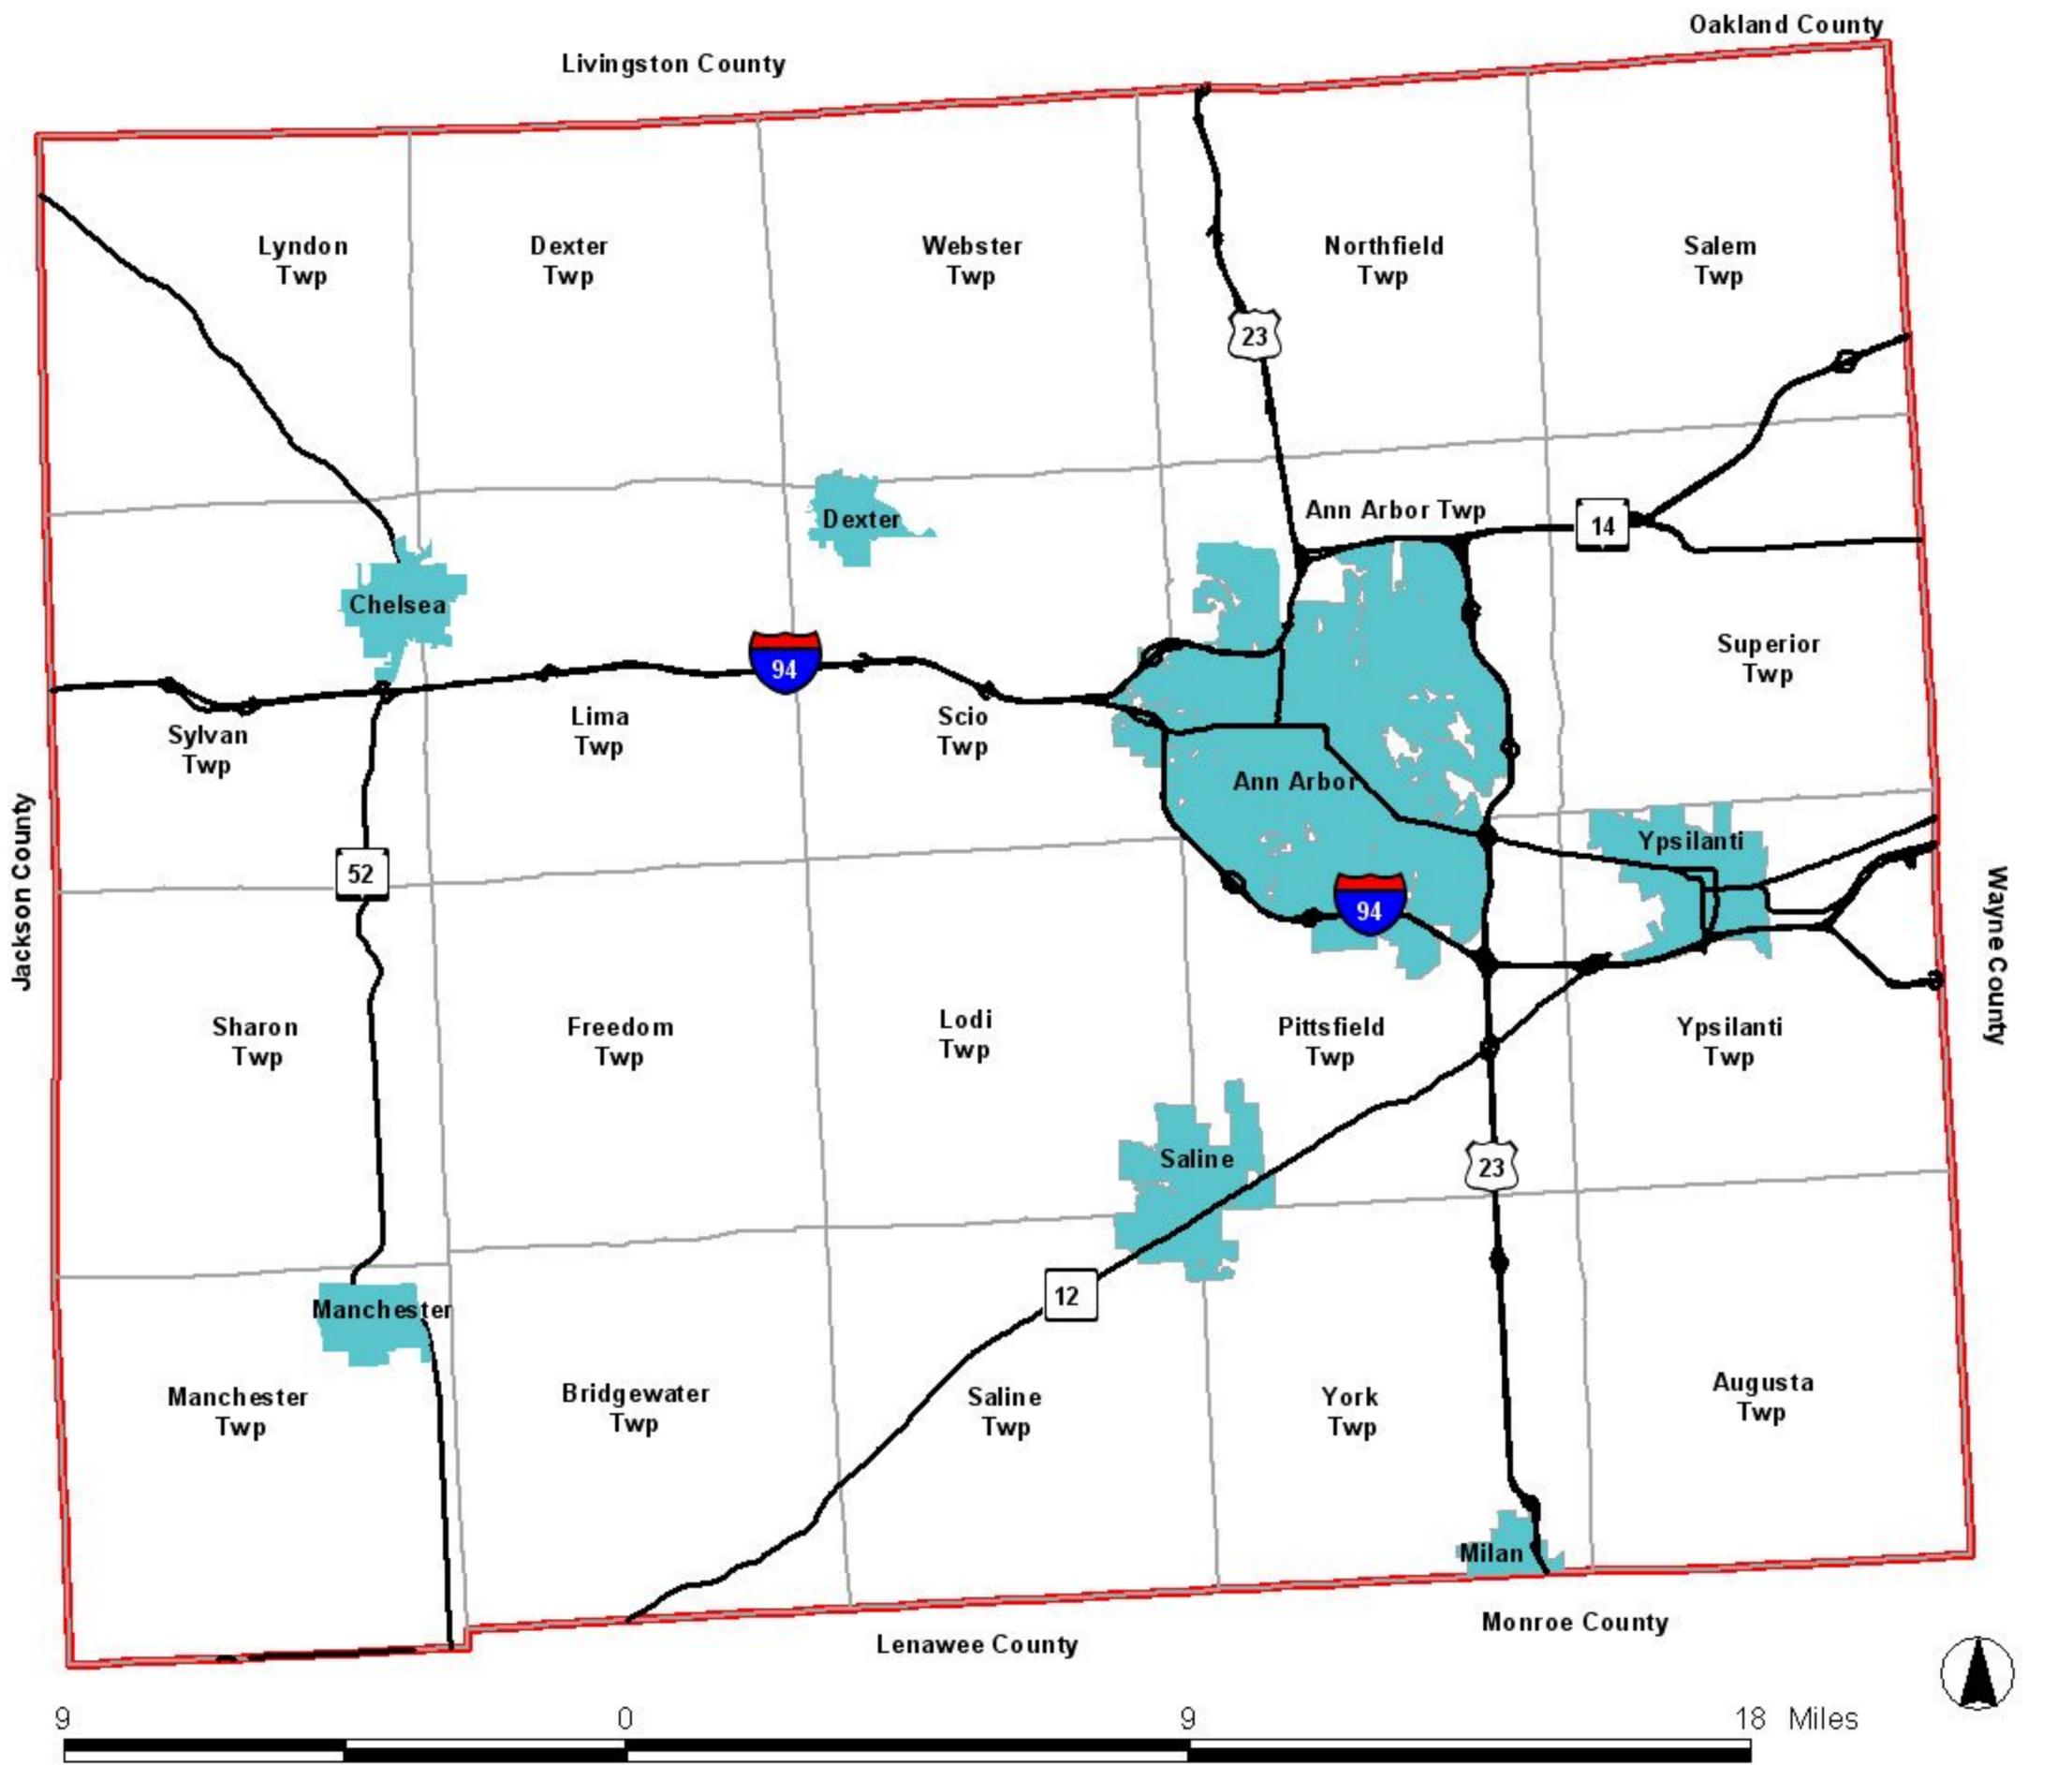

Neighborhood Park/Playground

This more specialized park is typified by more intense recreational development. These parks serve an area with a radius of between $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile, which roughly corresponds to a typical neighborhood of 5,000 residents or less. Typically neighborhood parks have either field or court games and playground equipment. Neighborhood parks are larger than mini-parks, ranging in size from 15-25 acres. Public elementary or middle school facilities may serve as neighborhood parks.

Community Park

Community parks are designed to attract users from across several neighborhoods within a 1-2 mile radius. These facilities are large - 25 acres or more - in size. These parks can be either intensely developed parkland with specialized athletic facilities, such as a swimming pool, or lesser developed parkland or natural areas with a variety of passive recreational opportunities. The NRPA guideline is 5-8 acres of community parkland for every 1,000 residents.

Regional Park/Preserve

Regional parks draw users from across a wide area - as far away as an hour's hour drive. These facilities are very large, typically at least 200 acres for a metropolitan regional park and 1,000 acres or more for a large natural area. In the case of the metropolitan regional park, these areas are characterized by scenic quality and the diversity of recreation opportunities. These facilities usually do not include ball fields and court games, however they may. Regional parks and preserve areas are largely devoted to natural resource conservation, and focus on more passive recreational activities such as camping, hiking, boating and bird watching. The NRPA standard is 5-10 acres of regional parkland for every 1,000 residents.

Unique Local or Regional Parkland

Linear parks, greenways, special use areas and special conservancy protected lands are considered to be unique local features. The most prominent of these - the linear park or greenway, provides non-motorized transportation links and may often connect different types of public spaces. The NRPA has no designated standard for the required amount of greenway/trail space for each community.

2.4 Recreation Providers

Parks and recreation services can best be provided through a system in which government at all levels, as well as quasi-public and private organizations, combine to provide needed services. Many agencies and private concerns plan and provide parks and recreation opportunities in the County. Public recreation lands and programs within the County are operated by four governmental levels: state, region, county and local. Specific agencies planning recreation in the County are: The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (MDNR), Division of Parks and Recreation, Waterways, Forestry, Fisheries, Wildlife; Huron-Clinton Metropolitan Authority; the Washtenaw County Parks and Recreation Commission (WCPRC); local municipalities; school districts; universities and community colleges. Planning for recreation services must therefore consider the respective roles and the interrelationships among providers. The different agencies and total parkland acreages are summarized in Table 1 on the previous page.

State-owned Park and Recreation Land

State government has responsibilities in numerous program areas. The state acquires and develops land in southeast Michigan for large scale or special park and recreation areas, water access and boating sites. Selected sites near and within urban areas should be provided to conserve unique natural resources close to urban residents. State recreational areas should provide extensive natural areas, where development and use are minor, as a public trust for their aesthetic, scenic, and open space values, and as buffers for their intensive recreational facilities.

Table 2: State of Michigan Management Areas (Washtenaw County)

Name	Total Acres	Washtenaw Acres
Pinckney Recreation Area	10,815	7,361

Gregory Game Area	3,400	126
Little Goose Lake Game Area	202	202
Water Access Sites		50
TOTAL	37,925	15,733

The State of Michigan owns and operates 15,733 acres of recreational land in Washtenaw County (see Table 2, previous page), the most operated by a single agency or entity. The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (MDNR) operates 14 state parks in southeast Michigan, seven located totally or partially within Washtenaw County. These include the Pinckney and Waterloo State Recreation areas. Furthermore, MDNR also operates the Chelsea, Gregory, Little Goose Lake, and Sharon Game Management areas. Most of these areas are undeveloped and provide wildlife habitat, hunting access, passive recreation and nature study. Approximately 1,200 acres are developed for intensive recreation.

County Parks

County government has a responsibility to provide those types of recreational facilities and programs that cannot be adequately developed at the local level. Since County facilities supplement local facilities, they should be readily accessible to population concentrations. The County should cooperate with other levels of government to protect open space and natural areas threatened by urban sprawl and provide recreational facilities and programs for use on an inter-community basis. A liaison function between other levels of government is also appropriate for the WCPRC.

Washtenaw County plays an important role in the delivery of recreation, parks and related services to enrich the quality of life of residents. Currently, County parkland represents a small, but particularly significant and growing, part of the regional parkland total. The Washtenaw County Parks and Recreation Commission owns and/or operates 13 facilities including one indoor recreation center, one golf course and 114 acres of active farmland in Superior Township. WCPRC lands total approximately 1,378 acres - which is roughly 6% of the publically-owned and administered parkland in Washtenaw County. Washtenaw County Park holdings are detailed in Table 3 (page 31) and in Map 2 (page 33).

Regional Parks

The Huron-Clinton Metroparks Authority (HCMA) operates 13 regional parks in the five-county southeastern Michigan region. Three facilities - Delhi Metropark, Dexter-Huron Metropark and Hudson Mills Metropark - are located in Washtenaw County. HCMA provides large-scale and special facilities to accommodate large numbers of users in well-defined and separated active and passive recreational activities. HCMA presently operates approximately 24,000 acres of land in its five-county district. Within Washtenaw County, the Authority manages one large and two small Metroparks on the Huron River totaling 1,797 acres: Hudson Mills (1,625 acres), Dexter-Huron (125 acres) and Delhi (47 acres).

Local Parks

In Michigan, municipalities traditionally have had primary responsibility for providing public recreation facilities for frequent, short term use by local residents. Urban areas, cities and towns have developed local parks and recreation commissions or departments that acquire land, build parks and administer programs and facilities. One consequence of this system is that many less affluent communities and sparsely-populated areas are unable to afford local staffing and lack the expertise to develop local park facilities. Another consequence of the system is that, as municipalities struggle financially, even the more heavily-populated urban areas are struggling to maintain existing parks and recreation facilities and programs.

The condition of the state's economy is forcing municipalities to explore potential intra-jurisdictional partnership opportunities. These partnership alternatives may allow municipalities to combine resources to better meet the needs of all local residents.

All cities and villages in Washtenaw County provide recreation facilities and services to some degree. Cities, villages and the more urbanized townships provide almost 4,557 acres of municipal parkland for their residents. Recreational resources utilized by these municipalities are typically drylands or river valley flood plains. Park areas have been developed for intensive uses associated with municipal parks and include such facilities as athletic fields and picnic grounds. Community park facilities are sometimes located on school district property since cooperation between the community and school district can provide for efficient use of land.

The City of Ann Arbor, with over 1,918 acres of parkland is, by far, the major local recreation provider within the County. Included in the 1,918 acres are two municipal golf courses and several areas for nature study and natural area preservation. Residents of outlying areas have long been dependent on the City for recreation services. This pattern has changed somewhat in recent years due to the increasingly active role the City of Ypsilanti, and Ypsilanti and Pittsfield Townships have taken in the provision of recreation services. The City of Ypsilanti has a total of about 84 acres of parkland, Pittsfield Township has 777 acres and Ypsilanti Township has 860 acres. The out-lying municipalities of Milan, Manchester, Chelsea, Dexter and Saline are also managing growing park systems ranging in size from 12 to 191 acres.

Park development in the other out-county areas has been slower. Park facilities range from small scale facilities developed as an incidental use of government land to full-scale community parks. In total, 14 of 28 local government units in the County operate park facilities. Local park facilities are detailed on the following pages and the ratio of residents to local parkland is detailed in Table 4 (page 41-42).

Local Recreation Lands and Projected Needs

Table 4 (previous page and above) documents the amount of locally-owned and administered parkland in each municipality within Washtenaw County. For the purposes of this needs analysis, school facilities, county and state parks have not been included. Many municipalities utilize county or regional facilities for local recreation, however these facilities are not classified as local parks. Furthermore, the nature of state and regional parkland often does not fulfill local, “close to home” recreational needs such as playgrounds and ball fields. Additionally, mini-parks and neighborhood parks provide free recreation alternatives while State and HCMA parks require user fees. Therefore, the analysis illustrated in Table 4 has not included state, HCMA or WCPRC facilities.

While there is enough total local recreation land within the county, many residents do not have immediate access to local recreation opportunities, as evidenced by the number of communities lacking any local parkland.

2.6 Other Recreation Providers

There are 11 public school districts, two state universities, and a community college in the county which own and manage a significant amount of open space, recreational lands and facilities. These include public school athletic areas, school nature preserves, university sports fields, golf courses and field research properties. Some properties, public school playgrounds for example, are readily available to neighboring residents during off hours; others, such as sports facilities at the universities, are reserved for members only. Still other university properties, like Saginaw Forest in Scio Township, are used by visitors for recreational purposes because of their trails, natural amenities and low intensity use.

Public University Land

The universities and colleges located in Washtenaw County provide recreation facilities totaling some 2,800 acres for the use and instruction of students. In addition, the universities manage botanical gardens and arboretums. The University of Michigan provides two golf courses, primarily for the use of their students and staff. The major portion of landholdings is reserved for scientific study and research by the respective institutions.

The institutional land provides a valuable addition to local park and recreation facilities.

Local Public School Facilities

School facilities also play an important role in providing local recreation opportunities. In many communities, schools provide all local recreation, particularly play areas. High schools also often serve as de facto regional recreational centers with active recreation facilities such as gyms, ball fields, pools and other specialized facilities. Map 3 (page 47) details the location of school properties and individual schools within the County.

Relying on school districts for local recreation has drawbacks. One major consideration is that many school facilities, gymnasiums in particular, are fully scheduled and utilized by the schools. In off-seasons, after school hours and during summer periods these facilities may be able to accommodate additional programming and use.

Other Public Land

Other publicly-funded institutions in the County own land that benefits the public only as a visual asset. This land is neither publicly-accessible nor available for recreational use. Approximately 1,500 acres fall into this category, the majority located in York Township at the Ypsilanti State Hospital and two state prison sites.

Private Facilities

Private lands comprise a large portion of the total recreation area in Washtenaw County and account for approximately 3,900 acres. Located primarily in outlying areas, country clubs, sports clubs, and camps are available to members of the community who belong to particular organizations, with membership fees a usual requirement.
